

602 WILDLAND FIRE PROTECTION DISTRICTS

A. DESCRIPTION OF WILDLAND FIRE PROTECTION DISTRICTS

Wildland fire protection districts are areas of classified forest land with a definable boundary. All of the forest land within the areas is protected by a recognized protection agency, and the private landowners pay for the protection received via the assessment rolls. Government lands within the District may be protected, with payment procedures outlined in a master agreement. A wildland fire protection district may be divided up into several protection units, each protected by a separate protection agency. This is usually done to allow an agency with a predominant land ownership, or offices and facilities in the areas, to become involved. This system of one agency in a given unit providing protection to all lands within the unit has proven both effective and economical.

A Wildland Fire Protection District is formed by a vote of the landowners (see 76-13-204 MCA). To form a Wildland Fire Protection District, boundaries must be set, notice to landowners given, meetings held, petitions circulated, and a vote taken (see Formation of Wildland Fire Districts – Samples, pages 602-3 through 602-13). The district, once formed, will be assigned by the Department to a recognized protection agency for protection. A recognized protection agency is defined as an agency recognized by the Department as having full fire protection responsibilities. Some of the criteria for designation as a recognized protection agency is (but not limited to) whether that agency has the capability and full ability to maintain, sustain, and pay for all pre-suppression, readiness, suppression, and related responsibilities on assessed Wildland Fire Protection District, Affidavit, or Non-Forest Agreement lands. A Recognized Protection Agency is not to be confused with a jurisdictional agency, which has legal authority to respond to fire activity on a given piece of geography. There is only one Recognized Fire Protection Agency for a given piece of assessed land, whereas there can be and often is more than one jurisdictional agency for that same piece of land. Thus, Counties and their fire agencies can be and often are jurisdictional agencies who share suppression obligations, but who are not able to meet criteria as a Recognized Protection Agency.

The protection provided for a wildland fire protection district is the highest level of wildland fire protection available.

PROPOSED GALLATIN RIVER WILDLAND FIRE PROTECTION DISTRICT HEARINGS SET

Hearings have been set to discuss the possibility of forming a wildland fire protection district to encompass the State-owned and privately-owned forest lands within the fire protection boundary of the Gallatin River Unit of the Gallatin National Forest, Jerry Beagley, Land Office Manager for the Montana DNRC announced this week.

These hearings will be held as follows: (insert dates, etc...)

Indications are that a majority of the owners of approximately 151,000 acres of classified forest land within the area are favorable to the idea of forming a district because higher quality fire protection will be permitted, Beagley said. All owners of classified forest land within the proposed district will receive a letter of explanation within the next two weeks. The public meetings are designed to provide an exchange of ideas, and to clarify questions landowners may have, before they are asked to sign the petition for the district, Beagley added.

SAMPLE Fact Sheet – Wildland Fire Protection Districts

FACT SHEET

PROPOSED GALLATIN RIVER WILDLAND FIRE PROTECTION DISTRICT 1973

1. Changing from affidavits to a district will reduce the amount of clerical work involved in the program and over a period of time help in keeping costs down.
2. The level of protection will be increased by going to a district. The agency no longer has to check ownership prior to responding to a fire call, thereby reducing response time.
3. Everyone within the district will receive protection. Everyone pays his fair share. The threat of fire from a neighbor's property, not on affidavit, will be greatly reduced.
4. The landowner no longer has to refile his affidavit if his ownership changes, these changes are automatically made by the agency.
5. The protection agency will continue to fight all forest fires, regardless of size or expense.
6. The protection district level of protection is substantially higher than that being provided to lands outside of the district.
7. The forest landowner continues to meet the requirements of states statutes dealing with owner responsibilities.
8. The landowner no longer has an option to cancel each year as he had under the affidavit system.
9. The assessment rate chargeable to the landowner continues to be limited by state regulations.

PETITION FOR THE GALLATIN RIVER WILDLAND FIRE PROTECTION DISTRICT

To the Montana Department of Natural Resources and Conservation:

We, the undersigned, pursuant to the provisions of 76-13-204 MCA respectfully submit to you:

1. That we are the owners of fifty-one percent (51%) or more of the privately-owned, classified forest land acreage within the proposed district.
2. That we constitute fifty-one percent (51%) or more of the taxpayers, who are freeholders of the private forest land within the proposed district, and whose names appeared as said taxpayers upon the last completed preceding assessment roll.
3. We desire that the Montana Department of Natural Resources & Conservation establish a Wildland Fire Protection District to be known as the Gallatin River Wildland Fire Protection District, and to include in said District the lands within the Protection Boundary of the Gallatin National Forest, Gallatin River unit of the United States Forest Service. (See attached map of the Gallatin River Unit Boundary.)

Wherefore, we petition that the said Wildland Fire Protection District be established by the Montana Department of Natural Resources & Conservation, and that the District be provided protection through the Department according to the provisions of 76-13-204 MCA, as amended.

Missoula, Montana 59801

March 26, 1983

Gary Brown, Administrator, Montana Division of Forestry, today approval by the Montana Department of Natural Resources & Conservation, of the formation of a wildland fire protection district south of Bozeman. The district known as the Gallatin River Wildland Fire Protection District encompasses some 150,000 acres of State and privately owned forest lands. All of these lands are located within the boundaries of the Gallatin National Forest – Gallatin River Unit.

The District was formed by submission of a petition from the landowners within the area to the Montana Department of Natural Resources and Conservation. A majority of the landowners owning some 98% of the private land voted favorably for the district.

Brown also announced that the State would provide wildland fire protection to this district through the United States Forest Service, Gallatin National Forest.
